TEMPIO PAUSANIA – DID YOU KNOW THAT...?

In 1300 the city of Tempio is indicated with the name of Villa Tempio as a rural centre of Gallura Judicature, serving as home to the curator of Gemini territorial district. In 1506 through amalgamation of the diocese of Civita and Ampurias, Tempio becomes Bishopric, adding to its political relevance also a first order role in the religious sphere.

The leadership of Tempio continued in the seventeenth century with the institution of the High Schools of Piarists. In 1837 King Charles Albert of Savoy grants Tempio, the capital of a large province and the seat of the prefecture, the honours of town Hall and the administrative dignity of City. At the beginning of twentieth century there was a sharp increase in population due to the abandonment of the lands to the city with a building growth unprecedented.

Tempio today is undoubtedly one of the most industrialised core of the island, renowned centre of handicraft and industrial with a numerous factory of granite and cork.

With warm regards,

Marco, Christa, Ida & Jenny & the EN RLMM Team

Institut für Wirtschaft, Arbeit und Kultur

Dear colleagues, friends, supporters of the European Network of the European Network on Regional Labour Market Monitoring (EN RLMM),

In welcoming the participants in the XVII Annual Meeting in Tempio Pausania (2022), I want to remind that when in 2006 we received the invitation to participate in the first conference on regional labor markets in Europe, promoted by the IWAK Institute of the "W Goethe" University of Frankfurt aM, in Germany, our Institute did not hesitate to join such initiative. This was due to the high competence of the promoters and the strategic vision they presented: analyzing and evaluating the characteristics of regional and local labor markets, promoting their connection by helping to overcome the limits of an excessively fragmented European situation, working towards the construction of a single European labor market, as an essential complementary structure to the wider European single market.

On behalf of Eurispes I want to thank, first of all, the German friends who in all these years have maintained their faith and worked consistently according to this strategic vision, making a European network grow, which has become a model of interdisciplinary analysis and comparison, Special thanks to its inspirer and founder, prof. Alfons Schmidt who has been a permanent member of the Eurispes Scientific Committee since 2007, to prof. Christa Larsen, coordinator of the Network, to the representatives of the international and European institutions who have always accompanied this important initiative, to all the collaborators who have worked for the best organization of this event.

An element is to underline: the European Network ENRLMM, precisely because the originality and quality of its approach, has often anticipated in its analysis the topics destined to assume great relevance in the European debate over time, as clearly emerges, for example, in the various editions of the the "Anthology", the annual publication of the Network. Also on this occasion of the XVII Annual Meeting 2022, the ENRLMM Network addresses a topic of great relevance for the future structure of our societies, the economic systems and labour activities: the role of Artificial Intelligence with the structural changes it imposes on the organization and functioning of labor markets, in terms of employment, training and social inclusion perspectives.

We are all faced with a scenario in which a new system of conditionality and opportunities is emerging, a situation that requires in-depth analysis and comparisons and the search for those elements that can guide these processes in the construction of a "Good Society".

Professor Gian Maria Fara

EURISPES President

It is a great honor for all of us to host researchers, academics, representatives of public institutions, partners of the ENRLMM European Network on Regional Labor Markets Monitoring, participating in the XVII International Annual Meeting at the Eurispes Sardegna headquarters in Tempio Pausania.

The challenge of the double green and digital transition, aimed at a new development model, more fair and sustainable, requires everyone to seriously deepen our knowledge, profound innovations in our way of operating, the identification of new guiding ideas and practices to be disseminated in our societies, in public and private service systems. The commitment of the international scientific community gathered in Tempio Pausania on the initiative of the ENRLMM European Network constitutes a great stimulus for everyone to operate positively and actively in a scenario full of great tensions. Having created, maintained and consolidated over time this channel of cultural and scientific cooperation is a great value to be protected and supported. The annual meeting will also be an opportunity to introduce participants to the quality of this territory which has made great positive contributions to the evolution of our political, economic and social system and which is strongly committed to combining the safeguarding of a millenary tradition. with the profound innovations of this historical phase.
